

A Happy Surprise for the Amblers - May 2011

Last month the Amblers Group were cut off by a flood tide. This month they experienced an even more surprising event.

We set off from Arnside Prom for a gentle amble along the old railway line. The viaduct across the estuary is closed for repairs and so no trains can go beyond Arnside. As we made for the footbridge over the line, a railway employee directed us towards the relief bus service. We assured him that we were going over the bridge in order to do our walk on the other side. "That's alright then," he said, "if you're just passing over to the other side."

It was a lovely warm invigorating sunny spring morning, and the feeling of the group was that, if "passing over to the other side" was as pleasant as this, then we've not got anything to worry about!
